PRESS RELEASE

January 2024

Berlin's first INUSpheresis® practice has opened in the Trion Office Building, near Potsdamer Platz. To create a functional yet atmospheric space for state-of-the-art and holistic detox treatments, Batek Architekten designed an elegant interior concept for the 300 square metre practice. Light-coloured and natural materials structure the functional areas in a way that is comprehensible and comfortable for both team and patients, creating a clean interior with a calming effect. With ELLANN, Batek Architekten once again demonstrate their distinctive understanding of materials and their fine sense of detail.

In the reception area, timeless light-coloured oak panelling meets coarse-grained plastered walls, separating the work and patient areas both visually and functionally. Integrated wardrobes and storage spaces create a clear and straightforward aesthetic. This is complemented by a monolithic reception counter made of brushed stainless steel. Brightly framed steel and glass walls opposite, not only zone an inviting waiting area, but also provide a soft source of daylight for the reception.

A generous pivot door leads from here into an intelligently organised corridor and treatment area. Oak panelling delineates the corridor and treatment zones both aesthetically and functionally. The treatment area is organised internally with curtains that flexibly zone the six treatment units. A special highlight is the elegantly designed VIP area with a view over Potsdamer Platz.

The interior is unified by a light-coloured Pandomo floor that runs seamlessly throughout the practice. Upholstered furniture in creamy white bouclé, hand-knotted merino wool carpets and travertine side tables complement the interior design.
